1 I. INTRODUCTION

2 The proposed intervenors' (the "Proposed Intervenors") Motion to Intervene to Oppose 3 the Motion for Preliminary Approval and Settlement of the Fraley v. Facebook action (the 4 "Motion to Intervene" or "Motion") is not about protecting the interests of Facebook users; nor is 5 it about judicial economy, justice, or any other laudable goal. It is about attorneys' fees and the 6 protection of what a group of law firms thinks of as a business opportunity. The Proposed 7 Intervenors' attorneys seek to insert themselves into the Fraley action at the 11th hour, after 8 having resolutely opposed every previous chance to become involved in the case for the better 9 part of a year. They opposed MDL consolidation of their action with Fraley, they opposed 10 transfer of their action to this district, and they even refused to take a position on whether their 11 action was related to Fraley after it was transferred here. Now, in order to try to hold up the 12 Fraley settlement (the "Settlement") and gain a tactical advantage, they insist that they must be 13 allowed into this action. Granting their untimely Motion to Intervene will not advance the 14 interests of the Fraley Settlement class members. Instead, it will sacrifice the class's interests in 15 favor of the financial goals of a group of lawyers. The Motion to Intervene should be denied.

16 Substantively, the Motion to Intervene is based on a series of fictions that are facially 17 insufficient to establish either a right to intervene or any reason for the Court to exercise its 18 discretion in granting permissive intervention. First, the Proposed Intervenors' argue that their 19 motion is timely because it was filed two days after they learned the essential terms of the 20 Settlement. This claim is both false and irrelevant. It is false because the Proposed Intervenors, 21 despite what they repeatedly imply in their brief, were informed of the essential terms of the 22 Fraley Settlement weeks before they filed the Motion to Intervene. Their contention is also 23 irrelevant because the inquiry for timeliness turns on when they learned that the Fraley action 24 could affect their interests, which occurred almost a year ago, not when they learned of the 25 Settlement. Rather than intervening when they realized their rights could be implicated, as the 26 law requires, the Proposed Intervenors sat on their hands and waited until a settlement had been 27 reached before attempting to interject themselves into this action. Consequently, their motion is 28 untimely and should be denied on that basis alone.

1 Second, the Proposed Intervenors argue that their interests will be impaired by approval of 2 the Settlement. This claim inexplicably disregards that the Proposed Intervenors may opt out of 3 the Settlement and thereby fully protect their interests. Indeed, this opt-out option precludes a 4 finding that their interests may be impaired in a manner that would justify intervention. In reality, 5 the only interest that may be impaired by the Settlement is the interest of the Proposed 6 Intervenors' attorneys in being able to litigate all of their clients' claims as a class action and the 7 corresponding potential for those lawyers to earn greater fees.

8 Finally, the Proposed Intervenors argue that their interests are not adequately represented 9 in this action. Not so. Even putting aside their ability to opt out of the Settlement and protect 10 their rights in their entirety, the Proposed Intervenors' interests are fully aligned with those of the 11 Fraley Plaintiffs. The Proposed Intervenors' claims concerning the adequacy of representation 12 boil down to disagreements with the terms of the Settlement. Such arguments should be dealt 13 with through objection, not intervention. Additionally, their claims regarding the inadequacy of 14 the Fraley Plaintiffs ring particularly hollow given that, in arguing against transfer of their action 15 to this Court, the Proposed Intervenors conceded that they themselves would not be able to 16 adequately represent the class because transfer to the Northern District of California "would . . .
 17 effectively prevent them from adequately supervising the litigation . . ." (Opp. to Mot. to 18 Transfer Venue (Dkt. No. 78) in C.M.D. v. Facebook, Inc. at 8.) Their argument that they must 19 be allowed to intervene in Fraley in order to protect the interests of an as-yet uncertified class, 20 thus, is not credible.

21 It is clear that the Motion to Intervene is not about the C.M.D. plaintiffs' (or other 22 Facebook users') interests, but about the interests of their lawyers. Facebook respectfully submits 23 that the Court should deny the Motion.

24 II. STATEMENT OF FACTS

25 The Fraley action was commenced in California state court on March 11, 2011 and was 26 removed to federal court on April 8, 2011. Plaintiffs alleged violations of California Civil Code 27 Section 3344 and California Business and Professions Code Section 17200 et seq., as well as 28 unjust enrichment arising out of Facebook's allegedly nonconsensual use of Plaintiffs' names and

1 likenesses for commercial gain. (See generally Second Am. Compl. (Dkt. No. 22) (“SAC”).)
 2 Over the course of the following year, Plaintiffs and Facebook (the “Parties”) engaged in 3 extensive motion practice and comprehensive formal discovery, propounding approximately 500 4 requests for production of documents, 600 requests for admission, and 130 interrogatories. (See 5 Decl. of Robert S. Arns I/S/O Motion for Preliminary Approval of Class Action Settlement (Dkt.
 6 No. 184) (“Arns Decl. ISO Approval”) ¶¶ 29-44.) Both parties retained experts, produced expert 7 reports, took and defended depositions, and reviewed and produced thousands of pages (or, in 8 Facebook’s case, hundreds of thousands of pages) of documents. (Id.)

9 On March 1, 2012, the Parties engaged in a mediation before the Honorable Edward A.
 10 Infante (Ret.). Although no agreement was reached, settlement discussions continued. Following 11 Plaintiffs’ motion for class certification (filed on March 29, 2012) and Facebook’s opposition to 12 class certification (filed on April 19, 2012), the Parties were able to reach agreement on 13 settlement terms, which culminated in the signing of a Settlement Agreement and Release (Dkt.
 14 No. 184-1), which was filed with the Court in connection with Plaintiffs’ June 14, 2012 Motion
 15 for Preliminary Approval of Class Action Settlement (Dkt. No. 181). The proposed Settlement 16 defines the relevant class as follows:

17 [A]ll persons in the United States who have or have had a Facebook 18 account at any time and had their names, nicknames, pseudonyms, 19 profile pictures, photographs, likenesses, or identities displayed in a 20 Sponsored Story, at any time on or before the date of entry of the 21 Preliminary Approval Order.

22 (Settlement § 1.2) And it defines a subclass of minor children as follows:

23 [A]ll persons in the Class who additionally have or have had a 24 Facebook account at any time and had their names, nicknames, 25 pseudonyms, profile pictures, photographs, likenesses, or identities 26 displayed in a Sponsored Story, while under eighteen (18) years of 27 age, or under any other applicable age of majority, at any time on or 28 before the date of entry of the Preliminary Approval Order.

29 (Id. § 1.11.)

30 The Proposed Intervenors are plaintiffs in a related case, now entitled C.M.D. v.
 31 Facebook, Inc., No. 12-cv-01216 (N.D. Cal.) (“C.M.D.”), which was originally filed on June 1,

1 2011 in the Southern District of Illinois.¹ The C.M.D. plaintiffs allege that Facebook “used and 2 continues to use Plaintiffs’ names and likenesses for the purpose of marketing, advertising, selling 3 and soliciting the purchase of goods and services without legal consent, thus misappropriating
 4 Plaintiffs’ rights to publicity” (First Am. Compl. (Dkt. No. 107) in C.M.D. (“C.M.D. FAC”) 5 ¶ 66.)

6 The C.M.D. plaintiffs seek to bring their action on behalf of two classes of users:

7 All [F]acebook users, who during a time that [F]acebook records 8 identified them to be under the age of 18, had their name used in connection with a [F]acebook advertisement.

9 All [F]acebook users, who during a time that [F]acebook records
 10 identified them to be under the age of 18 and a resident of Ohio, Nevada, Illinois, Florida, Massachusetts, Wisconsin or Indiana, and 11 had their name used in connection with a [F]acebook advertisement.

12 (C.M.D. FAC ¶¶ 33-34.)

13 On August 1, 2011, Facebook filed a Motion to Transfer with the United States Panel on 14 Multidistrict Litigation (the “MDL Panel”), requesting that Fraley, C.M.D., and a number of other 15 similar cases regarding the use of Facebook’s users’ names and likenesses in alleged 16 advertisements be transferred to a single judge in the Northern District of California for pretrial 17 coordination or consolidation. (See Mot. for Transfer of Related Actions (Dkt. No. 1-1) in In re 18 Facebook Use of Name and Likeness Litig., Case MDL No. 2288 (U.S. MDL Panel) (the “MDL 19 Action”) at 4-8.) On August 23, 2011, the Proposed Intervenors opposed MDL transfer and 20 coordination of C.M.D. and Fraley, contending that (1) “transfer would only complicate matters 21 by adding another procedural interruption to three otherwise manageable and progressing 22 actions,” (2) “Plaintiffs’ counsel are working cooperatively to coordinate their efforts,” and (3) 23 because “[t]he [a]ctions [s]hare [f]ew [c]ommon [q]uestions . . . [c]onsolidating these cases will 24 be no more productive than if the Panel were to centralize every products liability case against 25 Pfizer regardless of the drug at issue or every internet privacy claim without regard to the 26 underlying dispute.” (See Pl. E.K.D.’s Resp. in Opp. Facebook’s Mot. for Trsfr. and

27 ¹ Since filing, named plaintiff E.K.D. moved for voluntary dismissal and other named plaintiffs 28 have been added to the action.

1 Coordination or Consolidation under 28 U.S.C. § 1407 (Dkt. No. 17) in MDL Action at 1, 5.)

2 Following denial of the MDL transfer motion, Facebook moved the Southern District of 3 Illinois to transfer C.M.D. to the Northern District of California pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1404(a).
 4 The Proposed Intervenors again opposed transfer and the possibility of greater coordination with 5 Fraley. (See Opp. to Mot. to Trsfr. (Dkt. No. 78) in C.M.D.) After that motion was granted and 6 the C.M.D. action was transferred to this Court (see Order, March 8, 2012 (Dkt. No. 93) in 7 C.M.D.), Facebook sought the Proposed Intervenors' support for its attempt to have C.M.D. and 8 Fraley deemed "related" pursuant to Civil Local Rule 3-12. Again, the Proposed Intervenors
 9 refused to take a position. (Gutkin Decl. I/S/O Facebook's Opp. to Intervention ("Gutkin Decl.") 10 ¶ 3.) It was only after the public filing of the Fraley Settlement—at least ten months after the 11 Proposed Intervenors learned of this action—that the Proposed Intervenors first showed any 12 interest in asserting their rights in Fraley.

13 III. LEGAL STANDARD

14 To intervene as of right: (1) the applicant must have a significant protectable interest in 15 the property or transaction that is the subject of the action; (2) the applicant must be situated such 16 that the disposition of the action may, as a practical matter, impair or impede his ability to protect 17 his interest; (3) the applicant's interest must not be adequately represented by the existing parties, 18 and (4) the applicant must timely move to intervene. Fed. R. Civ. P. 24(a); Arakaki v. Cayetano, 19 324 F.3d 1078, 1083 (9th Cir. 2003); League of United Latin Am. Citizens v. Wilson, 131 F.3d 20 1297, 1302 (9th Cir. 1997). The party seeking to intervene bears the burden of showing that all 21 the requirements for intervention have been met. United States v. Alisal Water Corp., 370 F.3d 22 915, 919 (9th Cir. 2004). Failure to satisfy any one of the four requirements is dispositive. See, 23 e.g., Arakaki, 324 F.3d at 1083 ("Each of these four requirements must be satisfied to support a 24 right to intervene."); League of United Latin Am. Citizens, 131 F.3d at 1302 ("[F]our elements, 25 each of which must be demonstrated in order to provide a non-party with a right to intervene 26 . . .").

27 Permissive intervention pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 24(b) requires an 28 applicant to "prove that it meets three threshold requirements: (1) it shares a common question of

1 law or fact with the main action, (2) its motion is timely, and (3) the court has an independent 2 basis for jurisdiction . . .” Donnelly v. Glickman, 159 F.3d 405, 412 (9th Cir. 1998). If these 3 requirements are all met, the court has discretion to permit or deny intervention under Rule 24(b).
 4 Id. The Ninth Circuit has stated that “the primary focus of Rule 24(b) is intervention for the 5 purpose of litigating a claim on the merits.” Beckman Indus., Inc. v. Int’l Ins. Co., 966 F.2d 470, 6 472 (9th Cir. 1992).

7 IV. ARGUMENT

8 A. The Proposed Intervenors Are Not Entitled to Intervention as of Right Under 9 Fed. R. Civ. P. 24(a).

10 Intervention as of right should be denied because the Proposed Intervenors’ motion is 11 untimely, their rights are not jeopardized by the approval of the Settlement, and their interests are 12 already being zealously represented by the Fraley plaintiffs.

13 1. The Proposed Intervenors’ Motion to Intervene Is Not Timely.

14 Timeliness is “the threshold requirement” for intervention as of right. League of United 15 Latin Am. Citizens, 131 F.3d at 1302. If the Motion to Intervene is not timely, the Court need not 16 reach the remaining elements of Rule 24. Id. In determining whether a motion for intervention is 17 timely, the Court should consider three factors: “(1) the stage of the proceeding at which an 18 applicant seeks to intervene; (2) the prejudice to other parties; and (3) the reason for and length of 19 the delay.” Cnty. of Orange v. Air California, 799 F.2d 535, 537 (9th Cir. 1986). In considering 20 these factors, the court “must bear in mind that ‘any substantial lapse of time weighs heavily 21 against intervention.’” League of United Latin Am. Citizens, 131 F.3d at 1302 (quoting United 22 States v. Washington, 86 F.3d 1499, 1503 (9th Cir. 1996)). These factors weigh decisively 23 against intervention as of right here.

24 a. The Proposed Intervenors waited until the last possible stage of 25 the proceeding to seek to intervene.

26 The Proposed Intervenors brought their Motion less than three weeks before the hearing of 27 Plaintiffs’ motion for preliminary approval. But they have known about the Fraley action and the 28 possibility that its outcome could affect their rights since at least August 1, 2011, when Facebook

1 moved the MDL Panel to transfer and coordinate C.M.D. (then pending in the Southern District
 2 of Illinois) and Fraley in the Northern District of California. (See Mot. for Transfer of Related 3 Actions (Dkt. No. 1-1) in MDL Action at 4, 5-6, 7-8.) The Motion is plainly untimely.

4 The law is clear that the timeliness of intervention does not, as the Proposed Intervenors 5 appear to believe, depend upon when a party first learns the terms of a settlement that it contends 6 could affect its rights. Instead, timeliness is measured from when a putative intervenor first learns 7 of a lawsuit that could affect its rights. See, e.g., Alaniz v. Tillie Lewis Foods, 572 F.2d 657, 659 8 (9th Cir. 1978). In Alaniz, the would-be intervenors sought to intervene following the approval of 9 a class action settlement. They argued that their motion was timely since they did not know until 10 settlement that the parties were not acting in their best interests. Id. at 659. The Ninth Circuit 11 rejected this understanding of the timeliness requirement, holding that “the crux of appellants’ 12 argument is that they did not know the settlement decree would be to their detriment. But surely 13 they knew the risks. To protect their interests, appellants should have joined the negotiations 14 before the suit was settled. . . . It is too late to reopen this action.” Id.; see also Cohorst v. BRE
 15 Props., Inc., No. 10-CV-2666-JM-BGS, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 87342, at *17-19 (S.D. Cal. July 16 19, 2011) (“The Special Master cannot accept Roman’s position that her Motion to Intervene is 17 timely simply because it was filed shortly after learning of the proposed settlement.”). Similarly,
 18 in Empire Blue Cross & Blue Shield v. Janet Greeson’s A Place For Us, Inc. the Ninth Circuit 19 cautioned that “parties who delay in attempting to intervene, and who end up doing so only after 20 the original parties have reached an acceptable settlement, should not be able, without good 21 reason, to intervene when their intervention may well cause substantial prejudice to the original 22 parties.” 62 F.3d 1217, 1219-20 (9th Cir. 1995) (holding that where “Aetna did not seek to 23 intervene until the day of the Blue Cross-APFU settlement, despite overwhelming evidence that 24 Aetna knew of the litigation since its inception almost two years earlier,” the motion was 25 untimely). In fact, the Ninth Circuit has repeatedly held, in cases such as this one in which a 26 party has long known of the pendency of an action that could affect its rights but has waited to 27 intervene until a settlement was reached, that intervention should be denied. See id.; Air California, 799 F.2d at 538 (“Although Irvine did intervene before the Stipulated Judgment was

1 officially approved by the district court, the fact that Irvine waited until after all the parties had 2 come to an agreement after five years of litigation should nevertheless weigh heavily against 3 Irvine.”); Alaniz, 572 F.2d at 659.²

4 Similarly, the Seventh Circuit has explained the intervention timeliness requirement in 5 this way:

6 The relevant inquiry in determining timeliness. . . is not on the time 7 between the settlement and the motion to intervene, but instead is 8 on the time between the [prospective intervenors’] knowledge that 9 the suit could impact their interests and the motion to intervene.
 10 Prompt filing of a motion to intervene after the settlement does not 11 indicate timeliness, particularly where there is evidence that the 12 intervenor should have known the suit could impact its interests for 13 some time prior to that settlement. In fact, as we noted in Sokaogon
Chippewa Community v. Babbitt, 214 F.3d 941 (7th Cir. 2000)], “that the prospective intervenor waited until settlement was imminent strongly suggests that the prospective intervenor was not interested in intervening in the litigation but in blocking a settlement between the parties—or at a minimum, this settlement.”
 214 F.3d at 948 (emphasis in original).

14 Heartwood, Inc. v. U.S. Forest Serv., 316 F.3d 694, 701 (7th Cir. 2003).

15 Here, the Proposed Intervenors waited at least ten and a half months to intervene since 16 learning of this litigation. They stayed on the sidelines while the parties in Fraley engaged in 17 substantial discovery, motion practice (including all class certification briefing), and expert 18 discovery. Moreover, the Proposed Intervenors did not just pass up chances to assert their rights 19 when Facebook sought MDL transfer and when Facebook sought 1404(a) transfer, they actively 20 opposed these opportunities to become involved in Fraley. As mentioned, when transfer to this 21 district first occurred, the Proposed Intervenors were even unwilling to take a position as to 22 whether their action and Fraley were related at all. (Gutkin Decl. ¶ 3.) It is only now, when the 23 scope of the lawsuit C.M.D. counsel may bring (and the corresponding fees they may earn) could 24 be affected by Fraley, that the Proposed Intervenors have suddenly asserted intervention is 25 necessary. Therefore, even if the Proposed Intervenors’ rights could be impaired by the Fraley

27 ² See also Nat'l Rural Telecomms. Coop. v. DIRECTV, Inc., 319 F. Supp. 2d 1094, 1104-05 (C.D.
 28 Cal. 2003) (denying motion to intervene as untimely where cases had been pending for four years and motion to intervene was filed after parties had nearly finalized settlement).

1 Settlement—which, as discussed below, they cannot—the Proposed Intervenors have only 2 themselves to blame. Their tactical delay in moving to intervene “weighs heavily against 3 intervention.” Washington, 86 F.3d at 1503.

4 The Proposed Intervenors argue that their motion is timely because “[t]he essential terms 5 of the proposed settlement in this action were only revealed on June 20, 2012.” (Motion to 6 Intervene at 10; see also id. at 4.) This claim is irrelevant, as shown by the authorities above.
 7 Moreover, this characterization of when the Proposed Intervenors learned of the terms of the 8 proposed Settlement is simply inaccurate. Two weeks before that date, on June 5, 2012, counsel 9 for Facebook provided counsel for the Proposed Intervenors with the full term sheet setting forth 10 the provisions of the Fraley Settlement and had in-person settlement talks with them as well.
 11 (Gutkin Decl. ¶ 5.) Prior to that date, and no later than May 24, counsel for Facebook had 12 informed the Proposed Intervenors that a settlement in principle of the Fraley action had been 13 reached. (Id. ¶ 6.) At none of these points, did the Proposed Intervenors assert their rights.
 14 Instead, they waited until three weeks before the preliminary approval hearing, and after the 15 submission of the Fraley Plaintiffs Motion for Preliminary Approval, to file their Motion to 16 Intervene. The Proposed Intervenors waited so long, in fact, that their June 22 Motion (which 17 notices a hearing for July 12) violates Civil Local Rule 7-2(a), requiring motions to be noticed for 18 hearing “not less than 35 days after service of the motion.”³

19 Moreover, the cases Plaintiffs cite to support their claim of timeliness are inapposite. In 20 United States v. Aerojet General Corp., 606 F.3d 1142, 1149 (9th Cir. 2010), the parties did not 21 even dispute timeliness. The intervenors had filed objections to a proposed consent decree 22 entered into by the Environmental Protection Agency within a month of publication in the Federal 23 Register and then moved to intervene a month after receiving documents pursuant to a Freedom

24
 25 ³ Inexplicably, rather than filing a motion to shorten time on their untimely Motion to Intervene 26 pursuant to Civil Local Rule 6-3, the Proposed Intervenors have disregarded the Local Rules.
 27 Similarly, the Proposed Intervenors violated the Standing Order Regarding Case Management in Civil Cases for the San Jose Division by unilaterally selecting a hearing date for their Motion 28 without conferring with counsel regarding the hearing date. (Standing Order re Case Management in Civil Cases dated April 25, 2011 at 1.) (Gutkin Decl. ¶ 4.)

1 of Information Act request. In total, only five months elapsed from the filing of the lawsuit to the 2 filing of their motion to intervene. Id. Koike v. Starbucks Corp., 602 F. Supp. 2d 1158 (N.D.
 3 Cal. 2009), is similarly irrelevant, as it stands for no more than the proposition that “a motion to 4 intervene for the limited purpose of appealing a denial of class certification is timely if it is filed 5 within the time allowed for a party to file an appeal.” Id. at 1160. Here, the Proposed Intervenors 6 do not seek to intervene to appeal denial of class certification.

7 In sum, the Motion to Intervene is untimely by a wide margin, and the delay in bringing it 8 stems from the Proposed Intervenors’ knowing and strategic choices. That they now regret their 9 earlier decisions is no basis to permit their last minute attempt to block the Fraley Settlement.⁴

10 b. Intervention would cause substantial prejudice to the Parties 11 and the putative class.

12 The Motion quotes some of the factors courts examine to assess the timeliness of 13 intervention (Motion to Intervene at 10), including “prejudice to other parties.” Despite their 14 acknowledgement, however, the Proposed Intervenors never address this factor in their Motion.
 15 Allowing intervention at this juncture could delay the settlement proceedings and needlessly 16 prolong this litigation, substantially prejudicing the Parties in Fraley.

17 Facebook and Plaintiffs have spent over sixteen months litigating this action, engaging in 18 extensive discovery and motion practice, and taking part in months of settlement discussions, 19 including a mediation before a highly-experienced mediator. (Arns Decl. I/S/O Approval ¶¶ 29-
 20 44; Decl. of Hon. Edward A. Infante (Ret.) I/S/O Pls’ Mot for Prelim. Approval (Dkt. No. 178) 21 ¶ 2.) Yet it is only after the Parties reached a settlement acceptable to both sides that the 22 Proposed Intervenors have finally moved to intervene—for the express purpose of seeking “an 23 Order denying the Motion for Preliminary Approval.” (Motion to Intervene at 3.) In such 24 ⁴ Furthermore, by August 1, 2011, counsel for the Proposed Intervenors were aware of the action

 25 entitled David Cohen v. Facebook, Inc., No. BC 444482 (Cal. Super. Ct.), that had been pending
 26 in California state court. Plaintiffs in that action sought to bring a class action on behalf of minor 27 Facebook users alleging that the use of these users’ names and likenesses in advertisements on 28 Facebook violated their rights of publicity. (See Mot. for Transfer of Related Actions (Dkt. No.
 1-1) in MDL Action at 7.) But the Proposed Intervenors took no action to intervene to protect their interests in that action either.

circumstances, courts are particularly inclined against granting motions to intervene due to the obvious prejudice to the existing parties. Decisions in the Ninth Circuit, among others, make this clear. See, e.g., Empire Blue Cross, 62 F.3d at 1219 (stating that allowing intervention after parties have reached an acceptable settlement “may well cause substantial prejudice to the original parties”); Nat'l Rural Telecomms., 319 F. Supp. 2d at 1104-05 (denying motion to intervene during settlement as untimely where “the overwhelming interest in having these matters settled after four years of litigation, at enormous cost to the parties, is paramount”); Reeves v. Wilkes, 754 F.2d 965, 971 (11th Cir. 1985) (“if intervention is allowed, time and effort expended in formulating the settlement . . . will be for naught”); In re Austrian & German Bank Holocaust Litig., 80 F. Supp. 2d 164, 172 (S.D.N.Y. 2000) (where intervention was sought after the parties submitted a settlement for court approval, holding that “intervention for purposes of derailing the Settlement . . . would cause intolerable delay . . . [and] certain prejudice”).

13 Furthermore, allowing intervention here would only delay the substantial cy pres awards 14 and injunctive relief that the Parties have negotiated. See Alaniz, 572 F.2d at 659 (“[i]n 15 evaluating the second factor, courts have emphasized the seriousness of the prejudice which 16 results when relief from long-standing inequities is delayed”).

c. The Proposed Intervenors offer no justification for their delay.

18 Similarly, despite acknowledging it as a factor in the timeliness inquiry (Motion to 19 Intervene at 10), the Proposed Intervenors have offered no explanation for their delay in filing 20 their Motion to Intervene. While they state that the Preliminary Approval Motion was the first 21 time they learned the essential terms of the deal, as discussed above, that claim is both inaccurate 22 and irrelevant. By waiting until the Parties had reached a settlement before moving to Intervene 23 (despite having known of the lawsuit for almost a year and the Settlement since at least May 24), 24 the Proposed Intervenors took the risk that the end result of the litigation might not be entirely to 25 their liking. See Air California, 799 F.2d at 539; Alaniz, 572 F.2d at 659. The Proposed 26 Intervenors certainly realized that—like any class action—this litigation might be resolved by 27 mediation or settlement. Granting their Motion at this stage would only serve to reward the 28 Proposed Intervenors’ unjustified tardiness.

1 For these reasons, the Motion to Intervene is untimely, and the Court need not reach the 2 remaining elements of Rule 24. League of United Latin Am. Citizens, 131 F.3d at 1302.

3 2. The Disposition of This Case Will Not Impair or Impede the Proposed 4 Intervenors' Interests Because They Can Opt Out of Settlement.

5 Even if the Motion were timely, intervention should still be denied because the Proposed 6 Intervenors fail to demonstrate that “disposing of the action may as a practical matter impair or 7 impede [their] ability to protect [their] interest[s]” Fed. R. Civ. P. 24(a)(2); Arakaki, 324 8 F.3d at 1083. The Proposed Intervenors have the ability to avoid any impairment of their 9 interests by opting out of the settlement. (See Settlement § 3.7 (detailing how “Exclusion
 10 Requests” shall be made, through which “Class Members (including Minor Subclass Members) 11 may elect not to be part of the Class and not to be bound by this Settlement Agreement.”).)

12 As courts have consistently recognized, where a class action settlement agreement “allows 13 any class member who does not wish to be bound by the terms of the Agreement to exclude 14 themselves by opting out,” the “ability to opt out precludes [proposed intervenors] from satisfying 15 the impairment-of-interest test.” Alaniz v. Cal. Processors, Inc., 73 F.R.D. 269, 289 (N.D. Cal.
 16 1976) (emphasis added); see also Cohorst v. BRE Props., Inc., No. 10cv2666 JM(BGS), 2011 17 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 87263, at *18 (S.D. Cal. Aug. 5, 2011) (fact that proposed intervenor “is able to 18 opt-out of the class and pursue her own damages action against Defendants” deemed “[f]atal” to 19 motion to intervene as a matter of right) (emphasis added); Bergman v. Thelen LLP, No. C-08-20 05322 EDL, 2009 WL 1308019, at *2 (N.D. Cal. May 11, 2009) (“The disposition of the action 21 will not, as a practical matter, impede or impair applicants’ ability to protect their interest [since 22 the proposed intervenors] may opt out of the class action and assert any claims they wish to 23 pursue against Defendants.”). This holds true even where, as here, the proposed intervenors, “as 24 potential members of the class, undoubtedly may claim an interest in the subject matter of the 25 action” Alaniz, 73 F.R.D. at 289.

26 The Proposed Intervenors assert that, among other defects, the proposed Settlement is 27 “wholly inadequate” because it “releases all claims that the class members, including Plaintiffs-28 Intervenors, may have against the Defendant, without providing anything of value in exchange for such release.” (Motion to Intervene at 12 (citing Settlement §§ 2.2, 4.2).) But while the Proposed Intervenors may not like the terms of the Settlement or believe that the relief afforded is sufficient, such sentiments have no bearing on whether their interests will be impaired or impeded where they have the ability to opt out. Alaniz, 73 F.R.D. at 289. Instead, the Proposed Intervenors are free to opt out of the Settlement and pursue their claims and their desired remedies free of any impairment or impediment. See Cohorst, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 87342, at *12-14 (the courts “have recognized that where the right to object to the settlement at the Fairness hearing or to opt out of the settlement exists, intervention is simply unnecessary to protect a putative class member’s interests”). For these reasons, the rights of the C.M.D. named plaintiffs are not in peril of being impaired at all. It is only the interests of the C.M.D. plaintiffs’ lawyers in protecting their ability to obtain the greater fees associated with prosecuting a larger class action that would be impacted by the final approval of a settlement in Fraley. That interest carries no weight here.

The Proposed Intervenors also assert that they are “named plaintiffs in a related class action . . . who believe that final approval of the proposed settlement here could work to bar their claims . . . without benefitting their class in any way.” (Motion to Intervene at 1 (emphasis added).) Without directly admitting it, the Proposed Intervenors appear to be arguing that they may intervene to assert the impairment of interests of unnamed, putative class members in their action. This argument is unsupported by any legal authority (in the Motion or, to Facebook’s knowledge, otherwise). First, like the Proposed Intervenors themselves, the putative members of the C.M.D. class have the same opportunity to opt out of the proposed Settlement and to pursue their claims individually, should they choose to do so. Moreover, no class has been certified in the C.M.D. action and, thus, the Proposed Intervenors do not yet represent the interests of absent putative class members. See Hofstetter v. Chase Home Finance, LLC, No. C 10-01313 WHA, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 129218, at *8-9 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 8, 2011). In Hofstetter, the proposed intervenor, a putative class representative in a separate, as-of-then uncertified class action pending in Florida, sought to intervene in a California class action. Id. at *2, *8. In assessing the requirements of Rule 24, the court found the proposed intervenor’s reference to “the rights and

1 interests of other consumers” to be inappropriate, as he had “no standing to represent any alleged 2 class from that other action.” Id. at *8.

3 Like the intervenors in Hofstetter, the Proposed Intervenors here cannot rely on their wish 4 to represent the unidentified members of their as-yet uncertified class as a reason to justify 5 intervention.

6 3. The Proposed Intervenors’ Interests Are Already Adequately 7 Represented by Plaintiffs in this Action.

8 The Proposed Intervenors also have failed to demonstrate that the Fraley Plaintiffs do not 9 adequately represent their interests. The most important factor in determining the adequacy of 10 representation is whether the movant’s interests are aligned with the interests of existing parties.
 11 Arakaki, 324 F.3d at 1086. Thus, “[w]here an applicant for intervention and an existing party 12 ‘have the same ultimate objective, a presumption of adequacy of representation arises.”” League 13 of United Latin Am. Citizens, 131 F.3d at 1305 (citations omitted) (emphasis in original). If the 14 interests of the applicant and an existing party are “identical,” a strong presumption of adequacy 15 arises and the applicant must make a “compelling showing” of inadequate representation.
 16 Arakaki, 324 F.3d at 1086 (“If the applicant’s interest is identical to that of one of the present 17 parties, a compelling showing should be required to demonstrate inadequate representation.”) 18 (emphasis added).

19 Here, the Proposed Intervenors’ objectives are aligned with those of the Fraley Plaintiffs.
 20 As they themselves state, “[l]ike the Fraley action, C.M.D. complains of Facebook’s use of the 21 names and likenesses of its users in advertisements without consent.” (Motion to Intervene at 5; 22 see also id. at 4.) Both the Proposed Intervenors and the Fraley Plaintiffs allege that their names 23 and likenesses were used in Sponsored Stories (see, e.g., C.M.D. FAC ¶¶ 1, 2; Motion to 24 Intervene at 11; Fraley SAC ¶¶ 3, 26), and both claim that such use violates their right of 25 publicity.⁵ (See, e.g., C.M.D. FAC ¶ 1; Fraley SAC ¶¶ 3, 108.) Both seek the same relief (i) a 26 ⁵ Interestingly, the C.M.D. plaintiffs’ Original Complaint only mentioned the “right of publicity” 27 once in passing as part of a string citation. However, after the Fraley Plaintiffs survived a motion 28 to dismiss with their “right of publicity” allegations (see generally Order Granting in Part and Denying in Part Def.’s Mot. to Dismiss, Dkt. No. 74), the C.M.D. plaintiffs amended their

1 finding that Facebook has used their names and profile photographs without their consent, (ii)
 2 injunctive relief, (iii) statutory damages, and (iv) attorneys' fees. (See C.M.D. FAC at 13 (Prayer 3 for Relief); Fraley SAC at 26-27 (Prayer for Relief).) Because the ultimate objectives of the 4 parties are aligned, a presumption of adequacy of representation exists. League of United Latin 5 Am. Citizens, 131 F.3d at 1305. Indeed, where proposed intervenors are members of the class in 6 the target litigation, they are presumed to be adequately represented in that action. *Jenkins v.
 7 Missouri*, 78 F.3d 1270, 1275 (8th Cir. 1996) ("There is a presumption of adequate representation
 8 when the persons attempting to intervene are members of a class already involved in the litigation 9 or are intervening only to protect the interests of class members.") (citing Bradley v. Milliken, 828
 10 F.2d 1186, 1192 (6th Cir. 1987)); Bergman, 2009 WL 1308019, at *3 (holding that intervenors 11 were adequately represented as class members).

12 While the Proposed Intervenors contend that their putative class is broader than the Fraley 13 class and therefore their interests are not aligned (Motion to Intervene at 5), the breadth of the 14 C.M.D. class is not relevant to the adequacy inquiry. To the extent that the C.M.D. putative class 15 is broader than the Fraley Settlement class, such C.M.D. putative class members' claims will not 16 be affected by the Settlement. (See Settlement § 4.2 (Class Members' Release).) On the other 17 hand, those C.M.D. putative class members who are in the Fraley putative class—and who would 18 therefore be bound by the Fraley Settlement—have identical interests (since they are literally the 19 same people). As such, a strong presumption of adequacy arises and the applicant must make a 20 "compelling showing" of inadequate representation. Arakaki, 324 F.3d at 1086. The Proposed 21 Intervenors have made no showing of inadequate representation, let alone the "compelling 22 showing" that is required here.

23 At their core, the Proposed Intervenors' arguments for why their interests would be 24 inadequately represented in this action are simply a disagreement with the terms of settlement and 25 with the litigation strategy employed by the Fraley Plaintiffs—neither of which is a valid reason 26 to allow intervention.

27 complaint. In the C.M.D. First Amended Complaint, the term "right of publicity" shows up in the 28 very first paragraph and repeatedly throughout. (C.M.D. FAC ¶¶ 1, 31, 39(e), 46, 56, 62, 66.)

a. Disagreement with the terms of the Settlement does not establish inadequate representation of Proposed Intervenors' interests or otherwise constitute a basis for intervention.

The Proposed Intervenors take issue with the terms of the Settlement, arguing that the scope of the release is inappropriate and that the Settlement does not provide “anything of value in exchange for the release” (Motion to Intervene at 14-15.) Both assertions are baseless and beside the point. The Proposed Intervenors cite no authority for the conclusion that simply not agreeing with the terms of a proposed settlement establishes that they have the right to intervene or that their interests will not be adequately represented. Indeed, disagreement with the terms of a settlement is the very reason that settlement procedures are structured to allow individuals to opt out and pursue their own claims and to allow those who are not motivated to pursue their own claims to object to the Settlement. In such a case, objection (rather than intervention) is the preferred procedure. See Lelsz v. Kavanaugh, 710 F.2d 1040, 1046 (5th Cir. 1983) (holding that “proposed intervenors who are also class members may object to any settlement that in their view jeopardizes their interests”).

Furthermore, the Proposed Intervenors’ arguments about the terms of the Settlement are incorrect. First, contrary to their claims that the proposed Settlement offers “no value” to the class, the Settlement provides for substantial injunctive relief that directly addresses the concerns raised by the Fraley and C.M.D. plaintiffs and $10 million to cy pres recipients who are well positioned to advance the interests of the class.⁶ (See Facebook’s Br. I/S/O Pls.’ Mot. for Prelim. Approval of Settlement (Dkt No. 188-3) (“Facebook’s Brief ISO Preliminary Approval”) at 19-20.) The Proposed Intervenors cite a full page of cases to support their claim that this proposed Settlement deserves “special scrutiny” (Motion to Intervene at 2), but none of the cases they cite deal with intervention at all, and none of them establish that any special scrutiny is required here. Only one of the cases the Proposed Intervenors rely upon involved a cy pres fund, and in that case

⁶ Such cypres funds are particularly appropriate where, as here, there are a large number of class members and individual recovery would be modest and difficult to administer and distribute. See, e.g., Six (6) Mexican Workers v. Ariz. Citrus Growers, 904 F.2d 1301, 1305 (9th Cir. 1990); In re Google Buzz Privacy Litig., No. C 10-00672 JW, 2011 WL 7460099, at *1, *4 (N.D. Cal. June 2, 2011).

1 the Seventh Circuit affirmed the district court's approval of a final settlement agreement. In re
 2 Mex. Money Transfer Litig., 267 F.3d 743, 749 (7th Cir. 2001) ("Nothing in this transaction
 3 smacks of fraud, so the settlement cannot be attacked as too low."). The settlement in Mex.
 4 Money provided for a cy pres fund of $4.6 million to public interest organizations related to the 5 plaintiffs, and attorneys' fees of $10 million. Id. at 746. The court concluded that the "relief to 6 which the defendants have agreed . . . is not an outcome to be sneered at." Id. at 748-49.
 7 Similarly, the court approved of the settlement in In re IKON Office Solutions Securities
 8 Litigation, 209 F.R.D. 94, 99 (E.D. Pa. 2002), another case cited by the Proposed Intervenors.
 9 The settlement in IKON provided only for injunctive relief, but the court approved it, stating that 10 non-cash settlements are "not by any means [] unprecedented . . ." Id. at 109.

11 Second, the Proposed Intervenors wrongly claim that the injunctive relief contemplated by 12 the Settlement is of "no value" to members of the class because it only requires Facebook to do 13 what it already is required to do by law. (See Motion to Intervene at 15-16; see also id. at 2.) But 14 the Proposed Intervenors fail to identify any law that requires the proposed relief Facebook has 15 agreed to provide under the Settlement. As explained in Facebook's Brief ISO of Preliminary 16 Approval, the proposed Settlement offers substantial value to the class, including (among other 17 things) enhanced notice and tools to control whether their Likes and activities are rebroadcast to 18 their friends in a sponsored context, (See Facebook's Br. ISO Preliminary Approval at 16-21.)
 19 The Proposed Intervenors do not and cannot explain how this is already required by law, despite 20 having the burden of proof.⁷

21 ⁷ The Proposed Intervenors' citation of Levell v. Monsanto Research Corp., 191 F.R.D. 543, 544-22 45 (S.D. Ohio 2000), for the proposition that "a defendant's promise to do something which the 23 law already requires 'is not a valuable benefit'" (Motion to Intervene at 2) is particularly off base, 24 because, while the Levell court noted that "[o]rdinarily, a defendant's promise to do that which 25 the law already requires is not a valuable benefit," it went on to find that the settlement's 26 requirement that defendant comply with federal law was "of value" under the facts of the case.
 27 191 F.R.D. at 554-55. Also perplexing is the Proposed Intervenors' citation of Reich v. Walter W.
 28 King Plumbing & Heating Contractor, Inc., 98 F.3d 147, 150 (4th Cir. 1996), for the proposition that a "defendant not the 'prevailing party' under a settlement that merely obligated plaintiff to do that which the law already required." (Motion to Intervene at 2.) The court in Reich actually held the opposite of the Proposed Intervenors' characterization—that the defendant was the prevailing party. See Reich, 98 F.3d at 151 ("We conclude that the district court did not abuse its discretion in finding King Plumbing to be the prevailing party in the settlement.") Only the lone dissenter Finally, the Proposed Intervenors cite “the failed Bluetooth settlement” in an effort to demonstrate the inadequacy of the Fraley Plaintiffs’ representatives. They argue that the Settlement here “provid[es] for more than ten times as much in attorneys’ fees than what warranted rejection in Bluetooth.¹” (Motion to Intervene at 8-9 (citing In re Bluetooth Headset Prods. Liab. Litig., 654 F.3d 935 (9th Cir. 2011)).) As an initial matter, the Proposed Intervenors misrepresent the terms of the Settlement, since the Settlement provides only for attorneys’ fees if approved by the Court and only in an amount approved by the Court (up to $10 million). (See Settlement § 2.3.) Moreover, Bluetooth does not stand for the proposition that a class member who dislikes the terms of a proposed settlement agreement may intervene in the underlying action rather than voice his or her complaints during the objection process. Rather, in Bluetooth, the Ninth Circuit vacated the orders of a district court approving a class action settlement agreement and awarding attorneys’ fees pursuant to a challenge brought by objecting class members. Also, contrary to the Proposed Intervenors’ suggestion, the Ninth Circuit did not deem the terms of the Bluetooth settlement agreement—including the award of attorneys’ fees—to be per se unreasonable, but instead found the district court’s inquiries and findings to be insufficient to assess the reasonableness of the award. See id. at 943, 949-50 (remanding, but noting that the district court might ultimately re-approve its original orders). Here, this Court will review the terms of the proposed Settlement, taking into account the positions and arguments of the Parties and any objectors—a process in which the Proposed Intervenors are free to take part. The terms of the Settlement here also are not analogous to the disproportionate award of attorneys’ fees in Bluetooth, where the district court approved a settlement agreement providing for an award of up to $800,000 in attorneys’ fees that dwarfed the $100,000 cy pres payment. (Compare Settlement §§ 2.2, 2.3; with Bluetooth, 654 F.3d at 938.) Here, the value of the settlement is several times larger than any attorneys’ fees that the Court may award under the Settlement Agreement (See Facebook’s Brief ISO Preliminary Approval at 21 n.2.) Cf. Harris v. Vector Mktg. Corp., No. C-08-5198 EMC, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13797, at *16 (N.D. Cal. Feb. 6, 2012) (approving stated that the defendant should not have been the prevailing party. See id. at 153 (Hall, J., dissenting).

1 settlement agreement where multi-million dollar award of attorneys fees was “on par with the 2 money to the class and the cy pres combined (roughly 1:1”).

3 b. A disagreement over litigation strategy does not establish 4 inadequate representation.

5 The Proposed Intervenors also disagree with the litigation strategy adopted by the 6 representative Plaintiffs in this action. (See Motion to Intervene at 5-8 (outlining differing 7 approaches to “Facebook’s principle defense”), 13-15 (disagreeing with settlement strategy and 8 terms), 15-16 (disagreeing with the Fraley Plaintiffs’ approach to injunctive relief); 15-16 9 (arguing that the Fraley parties’ approach to consent differs from the Proposed Intervenors’ attack 10 of the SRR as void).) But a disagreement over litigation strategy does not establish inadequate 11 representation of a proposed intervenor’s interests. See League of United Latin Am. Citizens, 131 12 F.3d at 1306 (“When a proposed intervenor has not alleged any substantive disagreement between 13 it and the existing parties to the suit, and instead has vested its claim for intervention entirely 14 upon a disagreement over litigation strategy or legal tactics, courts have been hesitant to accord 15 the applicant full-party status.”); see also Bergman, 2009 WL 1308019, at *3 (proposed 16 intervenors were adequately represented despite class representatives’ decision not to bring cause 17 of action); In re Charles Schwab Corp. Secs. Litig., No. C 08-01510 WHA, 2011 WL 633308, at 18 *4 (N.D. Cal. Feb. 11, 2011) (arguments that certification and approval orders were wrongly 19 entered have “nothing to do with whether there has been adequate representation, which there has 20 been,” since “[i]n the best case [they] present[] a disagreement over litigation strategy with class 21 counsel.”).

22 Furthermore, not only is the Proposed Intervenors’ argument that Facebook’s Statement of 23 Rights and Responsibilities is void (see Motion to Intervene at 5-8, 15-16) a mere disagreement 24 over litigation strategy and therefore irrelevant to intervention, it is also legally baseless. As 25 described more fully in Facebook’s motion to dismiss briefing in C.M.D. (see Dkt. No. 109 in 26 C.M.D. at 10-12), the C.M.D. plaintiffs’ claim that the entire SRR is void was already argued to, 27 and rejected by, Judge G. Patrick Murphy of the Southern District of Illinois. The Proposed 28 Intervenors’ position is, accordingly, barred by the law-of-the-case doctrine and, in any event, is

1 inconsistent with California law, which applies to all putative class members.⁸ (See id.; see also 2 Transfer Order (Dkt. No. 93) in C.M.D. at 8); United States v. Alexander, 106 F.3d 874, 876 (9th 3 Cir. 1997) (“a court is generally precluded from reconsidering an issue that has already been 4 decided by the same court, or a higher court in the identical case.” (citation omitted)); Hayman
 5 Cash Register Co. v. Sarokin, 669 F.2d 162, 169 (3d Cir. 1982) (“Adherence to law of the case 6 principles is even more important . . . where the transferor judge and the transferee judge are not 7 members of the same court.”).

8 c. The Proposed Intervenors previously admitted their own 9 inadequacy to represent the class whose rights they now claim they are trying to defend.

10 Finally, the Proposed Intervenors’ arguments about their interests not being adequately 11 represented by the named plaintiffs in Fraley are particularly weak given that, in arguing against 12 transfer of their action to this Court, they conceded that “[t]ransfer of this action to California 13 would . . . effectively prevent them from adequately supervising the litigation” since “California 14 counsel would be required [and] the guardians would be unable to attend pre-trial hearings and 15 would be burdened to attend any trial.” (Opp. to Mot. to Transfer Venue (Dkt. No. 78) in C.M.D.
 16 at 8 (emphasis added).) In fact, the guardians of the named plaintiffs and would-be class 17 representatives at the time actually submitted sworn affidavits stating that they do not have the 18 time or resources to supervise litigation in the Northern District of California. (See Affidavit of 19 Jennifer E. DeYong (Dkt. No. 78-1) and Melissa K. Dawes (Dkt. No. 78-2) in C.M.D.) Their 20 argument that they should be allowed to intervene here so that absent class members’ interests are 21 adequately protected is thus contradicted not only by the facts and law, but by their own 22 admissions in prior court filings.

23 ⁸ Strangely, the Proposed Intervenors state in their June 22 Motion to Intervene that “Facebook’ 24 [sic] Motion to Dismiss the C.M.D. Action is now fully briefed and pending before the Court.”
 25 (Motion to Intervene at 4.) This statement, of course, overlooks the fact that it was not until June 26 29 that Facebook filed its reply brief in support of its motion to dismiss. (See Dkt. No. 119 in C.M.D.)

27 While the Proposed Intervenors spend much of their Motion to Intervene arguing the merits of 28 their opposition to Facebook’s motion to dismiss (see, e.g., Motion to Intervene at 4-8), such arguments are not germane to their argument for intervention and, in any case, are addressed in more detail in Facebook’s memoranda in support of its motion to dismiss.

For the foregoing reasons, the Proposed Intervenors have failed to meet their burden under Rule 24 to demonstrate that they should be allowed to intervene in this case.

B. The Proposed Intervenors' Should Not Be Allowed to Permissively Intervene Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 24(b).

Permissive intervention should also be denied here. For the reasons discussed in Section IV.A.1 above, the Proposed Intervenors' Motion is highly untimely. See Donnelly, 159 F.3d 405, 412 (before a court may exercise its discretion in allowing permissive intervention, the threshold factor of timeliness must be satisfied); Nat'l Rural Telecomms., 319 F. Supp. 2d at 1104-05 (denying permissive intervention on timeliness grounds where the motion to intervene was filed after four years of litigation and while the parties were engaged in settlement discussions, since "the overwhelming interest in having these matters settled . . . at enormous cost to the parties, is paramount").

Additionally, even if the Proposed Intervenors had proven the threshold requirements, the Court should still exercise its discretion to deny intervention. The Proposed Intervenors are not seeking to intervene for the purpose of litigating a claim on the merits, see Beckman Indus., 966 F.2d at 472 (“the primary focus of Rule 24(b) is intervention for the purpose of litigating a claim on the merits”), but are instead seeking to intervene solely to hold up the Settlement of this action in order to protect their counsel’s pecuniary interests. The Proposed Intervenors will have the ability to either opt out of the Settlement altogether or, if they no longer wish to pursue their claims independently, to offer their views on the Settlement by filing a valid objection.

V. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Court should deny the Motion to Intervene.
